JERUSALEM - Israel awoke Tuesday to the cold dawn of a new economic era, with the value of its currency drastically slashed overnight and the price of such basic commodities as bread and milk earmarked for sharp increases.

The severe new economic measures were the result of an all-night cabinet meeting, the first held by the government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, which took power Monday night after winning a parliamentary vote of confidence.

Early Tuesday, the cabinet an-nounced a 23-percent devaluation of the Israeli currency, the shekel, and a sharp reduction in government subsidies of basic food items, forcing an average increase of 50 percent in the price of the commodities. The cabinet also announced a

23-percent increase in fuel prices. The measures were an attempt by the new government to begin to get control of the deteriorating domestic economy. They are expected to be followed by other steps, in-eluding about $1 billion in budget cuts and sharp increases in the cost of services, utilioes and imported

Late Monday afternoon, Israel's commercial banks announced a 5.5-percent devaluation of the shekel, But the Shamir government decided to push the total devaluation to 25 percent effective Tuesday, meaning that the shekel, which valued at 69.2 to the U.S. dollar oo Monday, was selling at slightly over 80 to the dollar on Tuesday.

The value of the shekel has been artificially propped up by the Israe-li government, leading to a growing balance-of-payments deficit that is a major factor in the country's economie troubles. Tuesday's devaluation followed a 7.5-percent devaluation that was imposed oo Aug. 10 Private Eye, the minister said he had once promised to marry his mistress, Sara Keays, 36, but had dodded Sara Keays, 36, but had Stores throughout the cnuntry were jammed with shoppers seeking to buy as much as they could pay for and carry away with them.

Meanwhile, government officials announced a tentative agreement to resolve a national banking crisis that threatens a sharp decline in the value of shares of stock in Israel's commercial banks, in which Israe lis have an estimated $7.5 billion invested. The crisis has forced the change since last week.

The plan, which still must be approved by the parhamentary finance committee, would allow investors to convert their threatened shares of bank stock into government-guaranteed bonds with a fixed yield.

BEIRUT - Attempts to get Lebanon's warring factions together for a conference of national reconciliation were thrown into confusioo Tuesday as the Druze leader. Walid Jumblat, rejected the presi-dential palace at Baabda as a meeting site and suggested that the con-ference be held aboard a ocutral ship in Lebanese waters.

A spokesman for President Amin Gemayel, however, said the president was unwilling to consider any sites other than his palace or Saudi Arabia, Oo Monday, a senior U.S. official here had expressed optimism after Syria agreed to the Baabda site, providing it was acceptable to Mr. Jumblat, head of the Progressive Socialist Party. The official had predicted that the reconciliation conference could-be held by next Wednesday at the palace.

Compounding the confusioo over attempts to bring Mr. Gemayel's government and various religious factions together to discuss revisions in power-sharing in Leba-oon was the appearance Tuesday of the Lebanese Army chief of staff. General Haikim, dressed in civilian clothes, told reporters he had not defected, but that he intended to consult with Mr. Jumblat when the latter returned from a European trip.

A spokesman for the Druze party here said that General Haikim "probably" would leave the Lebaoese Army on Wednesday. The chief of staff's appearance with Druze defectors suggested that Mr. Jumblat's party might be attempting to apply pressure on the Ge-mayel government for bargaining

The only note of optimism Tuesday was a reported agreement that a preliminary meeting to discuss the conference's agenda would start Thursday at the Health Ministry here. Mr. Jumblat, at a Stockholm

Cuts Weaken Civil Rights Enforcement in U.S., Report Says 6 Agencies Cited for Decline in Action on Compliance and Investigations Under Reagan

By Robert Pear New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The Commission on Civil Rights says in a report that two years of fiscal austerity and staff reductions have seriously eroded the enforcement of civil rights by the federal govern-

The report asserted that there had been a noticeable decline in enforcement at six agencies: the Departments of Justice, Education. Labor, Health and Human Services, and Housing and Urban Development, as well as the Equal Employment Opportunity Com-

In some areas, such as housing, it said, compliance reviews and investigations have declined to the point that "they have become virtually negligible."

The report is the latest in a series by the commission critical of the civil rights policies of the Reagan administration. White House officials contend that such criticism is politically motivated, but commission members deny it. President it stated. By the fiscal year 1982,

The conclusions of the report were disputed Monday by administration officials, who said their interpretation of the same data used by the panel showed that there had been an increase rather than an erosion of civil rights enforcement.

Commenting on the report, the officials insisted that total spending for enforcement had increased to $607 million in 1983 from $513 million in the fiscal year 1980, with $634 million requested for 1984. These figures reflect "a substantial increase in the priority accorded civil rights," Mr. Reagan said in his budget message in January. The Labor Department's success

Opinion polls show that since 1980, when Mr. Reagan won about 27 percent of the Hispanic vote, he has increased his popularity in that community to the point that 42 percent of Hispanic-Americans now approve of his handling of the presidency and 38 percent say they want Mr. Reagan to seek re-elec-

The shifts in Hispanic support are mercurial, however. Mr. Reagan's sides concede that it plummeted in the budget-cutting years of 1981 and 1982 and could fall again in an election year.

Republican strategists concede that those not now registered — including legal residents whohave White House official discussing the not become citizens - are likely to register as Democrats.

Mr. Reagan also appears, by emphasizing to Hispanic-Americans his opposition to racial quotas, to be using Hispanic voters to isolate blacks in their support for such standards and their complaint that Mr. Reagan's policies have been unfair to the poor and minorities. After consistently appealing to

Hispanic voters by trumpeting the "shared values" he has with them, particularly prayer in poblic schools and opposition to abortion, Mr. Reagan has been talking about quotas in recent weeks. White House aides acknowledge > Senior U.S. officials said, however, that the Kremlin had intended for years to deploy its new missiles as replacements for older Frog. Scud and SS-12 missiles.

These officials contended that the Kremlin is trying to intimidate U.S. allies and exploit anxietics in Western Europe by threatening weapon deployments it had been planning anyway.

In the increasingly complicated debates about ouclear-arms control, certain weapons have come to symbolize specific U.S.-Soviet confrontations.

The new Soviet SS-20 missile, for example, has come to symbolize the stalemate at the lotermediate-Range Nuclear Forces negotiations in Geneva to limit U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe.

These negotiations involve weapons like the SS-20, with its range of up to 3,000 miles, targeted on Western Europe.

The Soviet Union already has more than 350 SS-20s, each of which carries three ouclear warheads. They can be shifted between the European and Asian portions of the Soviet Union.

To counter this Soviet threat, the NATO alliance is about to start deploying the first of 572 new single-warhead Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe unless an agreement can be reached first in Geneva. Such an agreement is now seen as extremely unlikely.
It appears likely that the new neration of shorter-range Soviet missiles is about to take on a similar symbolic importance. These missiles are judged to be more ac-curate and reliable than those they replace. Some also have longer ranges. All of them are believed able to fire either atomic or conventional warheads.

According to Pentagon and other sources, the SS-21 is meant to replace the older Frog missiles, about 250 of which have been deployed for many years in the six countries allied with the Soviet Union in the Warsaw Pact: Bulgaria. Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland and Romania.

lieve that nuclear warheads for these missiles are always in custody of Soviet authorities, probably in and around the missile sites in Eastern Europe,

The short-range SS-21s began appearing with Soviet units inside the Soviet Union in the mid-1970s. But so far they have been deployed in only one Warsaw Pact country, East Germany. Between 30 and 50 are believed to be in East Germany now, with the Soviet Union adding about four new missile launchers each month. The SS-23 missile is meant to replace the Scud, about 300 of which are believed to be deployed throughout Eastern Europe. However, the SS-23 so far has been spotted by U.S. intelligence only inside the Soviet Union. The new weapon, like the older Scud, is meant to move along with Soviet Army units as they approach the front lines. But the SS-23's 300-er than the Scud's. The SS-22 missile, meant to replace the older SS-12, is being watched especially closely by U.S.

The 100 SS-12s currently deployed have always been just inside Soviet borders, from where they still can hit Western targets, rather than in Eastern Europe. Officials are watching to see if Moscow puts the replacement SS-22s in other

Seoul After the Shock

The toll in Rangoon takes one's breath away. Some 20 people died, including 16 members of visiting South Korean President Chun Doo Hwan's delegation. The 16 including the country's foreign policy and economic elite. The president escaped only by a freak of timing. South Korea deserves the condolences of decent people everywhere,

The hand that placed the bomb has not been identified, but communist North Korea's long record of violence, cruelty and contempt for law makes it the prime suspect. The Korean War is only the best known chapter in the North's continuing effort to subvert and destroy the government in the South. No other nation faces the kind of fanatical, day-in-dayont, guns-cocked enmity that is South Korea's routine burden. The total menace posed by Pyongyang goes a good way, although not the whole way, to explain Seoul's inability to create the open political democracy espoused by its American patrons over the years. In Seoul, officials hint that some form of retribution is being planned. One hopes the government will not feed expectations it can satisfy only at its own peril. The grief, shock and rage now running in South Korea are understandable. The leadership is no doubt considering how to keep South Korea's enemies from thinking they can toy with its security and weaken its national will. The leadership may feel under extra pressure for having found oo direct way to react to the Soviet Union's recent downing of a South Korean airliner.

But it is not given to South Korea to launch even justifiable acts of vengeance without full awareness of the likely consequences. South Korea has in effect a "contract" with the United States, its chief defender since the Korean War. In return for guarantees of American support in the event that it is again invaded, South Korea accepts restraints on its responses to lesser provocations. So heavily armed are both Korean states, and so hable to be drawn in are their respective patrons, that any other course would be fraught with the danger of an escalating war. Seoul can chafe under this disposition, but for 30 years it has provided South Korea with high security and confidence, the conditions for its great economic success and for its off-and-on attempts to root democracy in Korean soil. This is no time to change the "contract's" basic terms. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Watt in Retrospect

With the departure of James Watt, the Department of the Interior probably loses its most active secretary since Harold Ickes. Mr. .Watt has been a mover and a shaker. He has also been a loudmouth with a taste for controversy. That appetite brought him down, but not until he had radically revised the way federal lands and minerals are managed.

In his resignation letter, he claims to leave "a legacy that will aid America in the decades ahead." There is an element of truth in the hyperbole. Mr. Watt had the confidence of the president and was in firm control of Interior. He had a clear vision of his goals and, despite the friction that surrounded his actions, attained many of them. He vastly accelerated the coal-leasing program started by his Democratic predecessor, and threw open almost the whole outer continental shelf to offshore oil drilling. He did his best to avoid buying new lands for the national park system, and to derail procedures for adding wilderness lands. Putting development into better balance with conservation might have been a legiti-mate policy, but Mr. Watt never seemed interested in any sort of balance. A sound case can be made for encouraging development of off-shore oil, but be insisted that wildernesses and wildlife refuges, too, be laid open to explora-tion, although they are likely to contain comparatively trifling amounts of oil. Speeding up the auctioning off of federal coal reserves might also have made sense, had there been some shortage of coal. But Mr. Watt's interests lay in ideology, not economics. Congress, in-creasingly disturbed at charges that coal leases had been sold at giveaway prices, eventually slapped a moratorium on any more such sales.

Because he was so unpopular among environmentalists, it is easy to lose sight of Mr. Watt's high standing in the West and with conservative Republicans. It was his indiscretions, not his or Mr. Reagan's policies, that did him in. "I speak privately as I do publicly," he once said. "I'm not two persons. That's one of my problems." In a series of gaffes be offended sizable parts of the electorate. Comparing environmentalists to communists or Nazis intent on centralized planning was a typical provocation. But not until he selected the Beach Boys for insult did Mr. Reagan seem to hear.

With apocalyptic vision, Mr. Watt often suggested that he would be driven from office, a martyr to his high goals and to partisan enmity. He prided himself on being a good steward of America's resources, and he had the energy and talent to move a large bureaucracy. But his combative style and his extremism undermined the legacy he tried to build. The effect of his turbulent reign is not yet clear, but few would recognize it as stewardship.

The Olympics Belong to All

Peter V. Ueberroth [president of the Los Angeles organizing committee] has reminded us of a crucial matter regarding the Olympics. "It is important to remember that the Games do oot belong to the United States just because they are taking place on our soil," he said.
"The Games belong to the world."

There is a solemn commitment, affirmed by two presidents, that the United States will respect its role as host to the Olympics. That commitment means that all athletes will be made welcome, that the International Olympic Committee will have sole authority over the determination of those who will compete.

So the calls by some political leaders and private citizens to bar athletes representing the Soviet Union are appeals for a gross violation of a firm and proper national commitment. Those appeals can be excused, perhaps, because of the high emotion over the ontrage of the Soviet shooting down of a South Korean airliner. But enough. The proposal to bar Sovict athletes is wrong in every respect, punishin the innocent, trampling respect for the rule of law, jeopardizing one of the great international events and its potential to serve as a forum for peaceful interchange. Worse, the proposals would place the United States in violation of international rules that the Soviet Union respected during the 1980 Games in Moscow.

No action on this subject has been more regrettable than the unanimous vote of the California Legislature condemning the airliner attack with a resolution that included a call for a ban ou Soviet participation in the Olympics.

The United States staved home from Moscow in 1980 to protest the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The boycott did not deter Moscow from the terrible deeds still being perpetrated against the people of Afghanistan. In the end, it punished American athletes

Off Go the Super Etendards

Alarm bells are ringing in Washington and elsewhere following France's irresponsible ac-tion in going ahead with the supply to Iraq of five Super Etendard aircraft equipped with Exocet missiles. Already President Saddam Hussein is threatening dire blows against Iran.

France has gone ahead, although both the United States and Britain pleaded with [it] to think again because of the consequences any use of the missiles could have on Western oil supplies through the vital Straits of Hormuz. Iran has threatened to close the straits if the Super Etendards were dispatched, but such action would seem improbable until the dreaded missiles are used. At the moment, Iran exports about 2 million barrels a day, and it is doubtful whether [it] will do anything which impedes this flow. It is however not surprising that the United States is dispatching naval forces to the area, as any interference in the flow of oil could have serious consequences for consumer nations if it was prolonged.

It may well be asked why France has gone ahead on this perilous course. Commercial considerations seem to be the main motive, as Iraq owes something like $4 billion. The French also argue that the Super Etendard could prove a deterrent by inducing Iran into agreeing to end the war through mediation. But when dealing with a religious fanatic like the nyatollah it is too much to expect that he will react rationally, as the logical French expect, to the threat of the Exocet missiles.

Things the Greens Might Recall About America

WASHINGTON — America and West Germany are get-By James Reston

ting into a tight corner these days, with two important dates ahead. In the week starting next week-end the leaders of the West German "peace movement" are planning to put as many as 2 million people in the streets to protest the emplacement of U.S. cruise and Pershing-2 nuclear missiles in that country.

And on Nov. 21 the Bundestag votes on whether to approve or reject this effort to establish a balance of nuclear power in Europe.

President Carstens has been in Washington telling everybody not to worry. He addressed a joint ses-sion of Congress, met the press for breakfast at the Watergate and presided over an elaborate dinner, for which venison and other delicacies were flown in from West Germany, with Vice President Bush attending.

The press not only didn't worry but didn't pay much attention. Not so the White House or Larry Eagleberger at the State Department, who has been the disaster-control operative around here for years. .

In response to appeals from Bonn and other governments, President Reagan for the third time amended his proposals for a nuclear compromise with the Soviets at Geneva, although so far without anything but a nyet from Moscow. Nor has not defending our common civilizathere been recognition by the lead-ers of the West German "peace movement" that President Reagan tried but didn't get even a mediumhello from Yuri Andropov. One wonders if the Greens in West Germany know the record of America's efforts to control or even to abolish nuclear weapons. They should look it up and consider the geography of Washington. There are two hills in this city, oot one the political or Capitol Hill, and also the spiritual hill dominated by Washington Cathedral, And last Sunday, as usual, it was praying for peace, with Mr. Bush in the pulpit: For the nations of the world, their peoples and their leaders, that equal justice and true peace may emerge within them, and that a spirit of respect and forbearance may grow among them, hear us O Lord.

The Greens don't have to instruct us in America about peace, mercy

There is a bitle "green" in all of us. But America did not pass the Marshall Plan for the reconstruction of Europe or put 300,000 of its men for two generations between the North Sea and the Elbe in order to be told that somehow they were superior Soviet missile power. This point has to be made to America's friends in the West German peace movement. Twice Europe told us, in 1914 and in 1939, that if only America had committed itself in time to the defense of Western civilization, world wars might have been avoided.

The same of the

Now, having committed itself, America is told, at least by many in Europe, that the present conflict is not over the defense of the civilization or a philosophy of life, but is merely a struggle for power between the two clumsy giants.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The United States is not an imperial nation. If anything, like the Greens in West Germany, it longs for isolation and the impossible dreamy world of perfect peace.

Every nation has its dream of perfect security. No doubt West Germany dreams of the day when its divided nation will be unified. If America were divided at the Mississippi, with a hostile power on the Western slope, it would not sleep until it was united.

We understand the dreams of the Greens, but there is no perfect security. There is only the struggle, with friends at our side, doing the best we can, and trying to know where we're going and who's with us.

Listening to Mr. Carstens and his colleagues, we had the feeling, as we have had with Chancellor Kohi and Chancellor Schmidt before him, that they understood the tragic civil war of the West in the last two world wars and were determined to defend not only their nation but also our common civilization.

But they also realize somehow that maybe the most intelligent and idealistic members of our societies. in West Germany and the United States, cannot tolerate the struggle for anything less than an ideal solu-ion of the nuclear menace.

One understands. But the demonstrations and the Bundestag vote will tell us a lot about whether the alliance can hold together. Or, if it cannot, whether the isolationist impulse in America, always just under the surface, will divide the Western world once more.

Assessing East-West Damage

By George F. Kennan

WASHINGTON — The time that has passed since the shooting down of the South Korean airliner permits us, despite the persistence of several obscurities, to have some measure of perspective on this episode and its effects. ... Great as was the shock produced on world opinion, there was nothing in this event that should have been a surprise to anyone who had looked carefully at the Soviet Union in re-Soviet system that made possible the disaster—the exaggerated sensitivity to foreign surveillance, the inflenibi-ity of military command procedures, the Communist Party's insistence on its own infallibility — were deficiencies long known to all serious students and observers of that country.

There is no evidence that the final authorization to shoot down the plane was the result of a deliberate decision at the highest political levels in Moscow; on the contrary, there are strong signs that the political leader-ship was displeased by the military handling of the problem and proba-bly would not, if given the chance, have authorized such an action.

Finally, it had long been evident that the persistent and unrestrained mutual snooping — aerial, naval and electronic — around each other's borders, this childish and dangerous game at which the Soviet and American armed services have for so long been permitted to play, was creating an atmosphere of tension and ner-vousness in which incidents of this nature were sooner or later bound to occur. It took only the inexplicable obstinacy of the South Korean pilot. in flying defiantly at night over hun-dreds of miles of sensitive Soviet territory and installations, plus deficiencies of the Soviet system mentioned above, to produce the actual incident.

There was thus nothing in the epi-sode itself to change the basic as-sumptions and considerations underlying American policy toward the Soviet Union. But the outward effects of the whole development -the shock to Western opinion, President Reagan's relentless exploitation of the incident, and the Soviet reaction to that exploitation - have indeed created a new situation.

On the Western side, the peace movement, those millions of deeply concerned people who have tried to halt the trend toward war and to suggest courses more hopeful than an unlimited weapons race, has received a bitter discouragement. Soviet-American cultural and scientific exchanges, in which some of us had thought to see a few faint chinks of light, have been seriously set back. Soviet-American relations, in short, have received a grievous blow.

Even more serious would seem to have been the effect on the Soviet side. Yuri Andropov's recent statement gives evidence that he and his associates have now concluded that they have nothing to expect from the Reagan administration but implaca-ble hostility expressed in a determination to exploit their difficulties to the limit, to isolate and encircle them internationally and to press them to the wall in the military competition. If this description of Soviet leaders' conclusions is not overdrawn, it has disturbing connotations. Being well aware of Mr. Reagan's hard-line constituency, the Soviet leaders were prepared to take in their stride a certain amount of shrill anti-Soviet rhetoric during his campaign and the first phases of his presidency. But they expected that once this steam had been blown off they would be able to deal more or less normally with the new administration.

They did not expect anything like a real political intimacy; they recognized the built-in limits to the relationship. But they considered that there were areas where the respective interests were not wholly in conflict.

This is the first of two articles. The writer, a former ombassador to the Soviet Union, contributed this comment to The Washington Post.

Lebanon: Symptom, Not Cause

By Zbiguiew Brzezinski WASHINGTON — The more

farsighted Israeli statesmen probably realize that in the longer run Israel's security will not be en-hanced by a Middle East that is further destabilized and radicalized. Indeed, not enough thought has been given to the extraordinary opportunities for Israel's prosperity in the event of a genuine Middle East peace.

However, the more militant leaders bent on incorporating the West Bank into Israel certainly welcome devel-opments that have the effect of making the United States a direct military antagonist of the Arabs. This development oot only polarizes the Middle East conflict in a manner that is welcome to them, it also creates additional openings for the incorporation of the disputed territories.

From a geopolitical and strategic point of view, the most serious aspect of this development is that it is likely to rebound to the Soviet Union's advantage, Without becoming directly engaged, but merely by providing military assistance to Syria, the Soviet Union can reap the benefits of growing Arab resentment against the United States and of the continued absence of peace in the Middle East.

I have long held the view that the Soviet Union has oo interest in a constructive settlement, and that is why it should not be a party to any sored ellort to mote Arab-Israeli reconciliation.

The Russians' interests are best served by continued turmoil, and they are likely to be served best of all if American policy and military action create the pervasive impression of one-sided support for Israel. It is also only a matter of time before the United States is deserted by its European allies. None of them has any interest in duplicating America's willingness to take on the Arabs. Already some of them are placing obstacles to American military shipments in support of the marines. Before too long the United States will be alone in this strange adventure. The situation has so deteriorated, and options have so narrowed, that it is difficult to envision constructive alternatives. Yet what is happening is likely to produce the worst outcome of all: The United States will become gradually bogged down, the region is likely to be east into greater turmoil and the Soviet Union, without too much exertion, will find itself increasingly influential.

In these circumstances, the United States has to consider alternatives, however difficult.

One is simply to withdraw, realizing that such a withdrawal might increase the chances of a head-on Israeli-Syrian collision. But the prospect of war might have salutary effect on the minds of the feaders in Damascus and Tel Aviv. If war came, the Syrians know they would risk a military defeat; the Israelis know that casualties would be high. An American withdrawal would have the effect of making the two sides confront the question of whether they prefer war or peace. And, if it is to be peace, both would then have to accommodate and accent some compromise. Alternatively, the United States should more actively return to a determined pursuit of the Reagan plan. In effect, the central focus of American policy should be a concert-ed and determined effort to find a solution for the future of the West Bank and Gaza in the context of a larger peace settlement.

That means using American leverage in the region - military assis-tance, economic aid, moral suasion - to press the parties toward serious negotiations, and being prepared to impose penalties on those who are not prepared to cooperate. If U.S. power is to be involved, and if U.S. servicemen are to die, it should be on behalf of a desirable objective: a wider and more enduring peace in the Middle East. Focusing on Lebaoon alone will never lead there.

This is the second of two articles. The writer was national security adviser under President Carter. Now professor of government at Columbia University and senior adviser at the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University, he contributed this comment to The New York Times.

hope that at last, with the Palestin-ians out of the way, his country could manage its own fate. "If I knew then what I know now, he says with the warm smile that is the remains of Lebanese resilience, "Iwouldn't have come. But I have to stay and chronicle the birth —or the death - of Lebanon." The mood in Beirut is bleak. The cease-fire is bolding so far, and talks are scheduled on a "national reconoptimism. People have not begun to discuss rebuilding their gutted homes, as they did before.

The sense has spread widely that this is the last chance. Perversely, that may give Lebanon some momentum for a revival, in a distinctly modified form. Otherwise, disintegration will harden into statelets, no more likely to get along than Lebanon's fighting communities do now. But that will not solve anything.

The Middle East has not begun to look for solutions. Once again po-sitions are tilting, alliances are shifting, everyone is probing for the next contest of will. At the moment Syria has the upper hand, and the United States has moved to recognize that fact, after unwisely trying to exclude the Syrians as Soviet puppets.

The Iran-Iraq war is reaching ex-treme crisis for the whole Gulf region, and for the Western world. Nobody else wants either side to win. There are hints that Syria is begin-ning to quarrel with Iran, which it supported effectively by cutting Iraq's pipeline, and that it might be prepared for warmer relations with its rival in Baghdad. Sandi Arabia has played a more open, direct role in regional diploma-cy than ever before, drawing it into the other Arabs' quarrels to a point it had previously considered risky. Yasser Arafat's control of what remains of the PLO has been oearly trying to revive some kind of deal with Jordan's King Hussein, along the lines of the Reagan initiative, to provide him with a new base.

That is the last thing Syria would enjoy, although its wily president, Hafez al-Assad, may envisage estab-lishing a Syrian-controlled Palestinian ruler in Jordan in King Hussein's place. Mr. Assad never tells anybody what is in the back of his mind. It would be a grave danger for Israel, worse than the problems it had when the Palestinians ran southern Lebanon. The Israelis are not going to get the "strong, independent" (by which they meant: Christian-controlled and allied) Lebanon they set out to establish in last year's war. Even partition would leave Israel with an occupation it cannot afford. In this peculiar period, when ev-erybody is groping for new supports to offset new pressures, there are no fixed points on which to base American policy. Regardless of intention, the United States is now involved in domestic Lebanese politics because Lebanese politics is directly engaged with all the other disputes. Switzerland used to be suggested as a model for straightening out this bowl of spaghetti. But the Swiss made order of a mixed-up state divided into ocarly self-governing cantons by res-olutely staying out of their neighbors' conflicts and by defending their newtrality with a strong army. The Alps and the fact that the Swiss pattern was set long before there were tanks. planes and missiles helped a lot.

Still, the Lebanese are coming to see this as their last chance at nationhood. The idea of neutrality is beginning to appeal. Whether it would appeal enough to end their tragic habit of calling in outsiders to tip the balance in their fends is something else. Those who are thus tempted worry that the United States would object It should not, even though it might be occessary to include the Soviet Union as a guaranteeing power, as

What chances there have been for accommodation keep being lost because one side or anoth er is determined to consolidate battle gains. That happened a year ago when Syria was down. Lebanon's last chance is slim, but if it is lost there will be more losses to come.

This commentary offers no evidence for its gloomy predictions. It is contrived from subjective fantasies and uses makeweights that are only remotely relevant. If it were based on fact confirmed by two hard-probing reporters, it would be sensational. A case could easily be made to the contrary: that this is an epoch in which advanced years have come into their own. At last it is well recognized that the age of youth is one of violence, criminality and fanaticism and that the climax of anti-social behavior is reached at around the age of 20. Today even the American president is over 70. (I say "even" because the United States is identified with youth and the minimum age in the U.S. Senate is 10 to 20 years lower than in many other countries. Regarding dairy surpluses, discussed of George F. The United States (and the European Communi-ty for that matter) could in this way transfer a portion of their subsidiza tion costs to the sustaining of artificial higher prices for Third World raw materials. Those nations, finding their trade balance positions im-proved could consider repaying some of their colossal debt. If we are subsidizing our own waste, why not subadize someone else's gain - part of which would be bound to come back

Gandhi Said to Be Considering Early Indian General Elections

By William K. Stevens New York Times Service

NEW DELHI -A conviction is growing among politicians here that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will call national elections next February or March, nearly a year before she is required to do so.

Many feel that Mrs. Gandhi will go the country early to take advantage of a resurgence in her prestige from the losses that her Congress-l Party suffered in some state elections earlier this year.

Another and perhaps a more basic reason for calling early elections is that the first good monsoon in three years has produced a bumper summer grain crop across the conntry, creating relative prosperity and well-being in the countryside and villages, where most voters live.

What the situation will be a year from now is uncertain, these politicians point out, and Mrs. Gandhi is therefore likely to act while conditions are most favorable. Those close to the prime minister's inner circle say that she has not yet made a decision and is getting advice both for and against an early elec-

Both Mrs. Gandhi and her son Rajiv, who has taken a leading role Congress-I Party affairs, have said that elections will not be held until the constitutionally mandated date of January 1985, five years after Mrs. Gandhi was last elected.

Last week, Mrs. Gandhi dismissed the government in the state of Punjab, where more than 175 persons have died during the last 14 months in connection with agitation by militant Sikhs, who want greater political autonomy. The agency said the warning was given in a statement by the parlia-mentary speaker, Hojatoleslam Hashemi Rafsanjani.

It was the first official declaration of Iranian policy on the Gulf war since reports Friday that France had gone ahead with the delivery to Baghdad of five Super Etendard fighter-bombers armed with Exocet air-to-surface missiles.

"The Persian Gulf is secure as long as Iran has normal activities of the export of oil through this waterway. If any power — Saddam or the superpowers — tried to deprive Iran of exporting the oil, then the Persian Gulf has no importance to us," Mr. Rafsanjani was quoted as saying. He was referring to Saddam Hussein, the president of Iraq.

The agency added that Mr. Raf-sanjani "said that Iran has the ca-pability of blocking the Persian Gulf and it will do so in case the export of Iranian oil is hindered."

Iran has said foreign media were trying to provoke it by reporting it had threatened to close the Gulf if the planes were delivered. The news agency said Tehran had in fact threatened to act if the planes were actually used to interfere with Iranian oil exports.

Toronto, Now Canada's Biggest City, Composers Trade Cursors on Computer Music Is Still Groping for a Sense of Identity

By Douglas Martin New York Times Service

TO ORONTO — You can still go I to the old places here — those saloons with their separate gentlemen's and ladies' entrances, where the endless glasses of draft beer come in even oumbers.

"Each drinker is an island unto himself," said a patron of the Wheatsheaf, founded in 1849 and Toronto's oldest bar. "Ontario may be the Scotland that was."

There is also the Fim Grove Tavern, where the locals remember a man walking in six or seven years ago, shooting a customer and then strolling to another bar across the street to order a beer and wait for the police. Or the Edgewater, which a regular calls "the last bastion of the bouffant" and where old men in tuques timelessly chew on tobacco and the world's problems. Or the Winchester, where a makeshift country band sometimes forgets

But the old places form a vision of the past. A collective view owing much to Presbyterianism held that drinking was something not a little disrespectable that the sinful were doubtless going to do anyway. At least they could do it in the dark.

Today they're selling beer even at the ballpark. Half the residents of greater Toronto, which with a population of three million people is Canada's biggest city, come from other countries, and 56 languages are spoken here.

thought that the only place to see Toronto clearly is from the outside.

Canadians are both drawn and repelled. The owner of a store in rural Nova Scotia fled Toronto years ago but keeps returning for cultural events; the Vancouver television producer was ineluctably drawn to the nation's media center but damns its infuriating smugness, and the Alberta oilman declares that Torontonians care only about low energy prices, but comes to Toronto banks for loans.

"Personally, 1 always think of Torooto as a big fat rich girl who that the metallic skyscrapers domito make herself attractive," wrote Robertson Davies, a noted author "We can't trust ourselves," who ocoetheless lives here.

If this peculiar ambivalence seems reminiscent of American attitudes toward New York, it is hardly a covel thought. In 2 recent contest on how best to improve the city, an artist and real estate de-iloper, Charles Pachter, suggested "reduced air fares to New York."

It is, indeed, intriguing how Torontonians flock to the reseaurant Joe Allen, an almost exact copy of the original on 46th Street in Manfrom draft dodgers to executives, Toronto is home to more Ameri-

Pikes Peak Will Keep 2 Spotlights

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado — The Colorado Springs City Council approved a plan for two spotlights to permanently illumi-nate the top of Pikes Peak. The lights had been placed atop the 14,000-foot landmark for a monthlong trial after an emotional three-hour meeting with residents angry about the original proposal to string 18 amber, sodium vapor lights on the mountain. The $15,300 set of lights had been donated to the city by Al Hill of Colorado Springs.

Putting lights on Pikes Peak was "like putting something on the American flag or the Statue of Liberty," said Murray Ross, one of the protesters.

"Because," a spokesman for the house said, "it's always been Vuitton's policy to keep up with the times. We're trying to introduce the so-called "Speedy," a small, zippered bag that doubles as a handbag, which became their best-

Yet in the laboratory spirit of Berlin, a sur-prising number of the squatters have found their own niche in the life of the city.

There are no policemen in sight. "They don't like to come in here," said Mr. Wargin, adding that even though there is no more serious crime than in other parts of the city, "there is a potential terrorist underground."

In spite of the blight of the area, there is scaffolding on many of the decaying buildings.

One can see new window frames and newly painted walls. Inside, some of the worn wooden stairs have been repaired with bits of oew wood. Rudimentary kitchens and toilets are being fitted where there were no such facilities before. The work is unfinished and is obviously done in

Leaders of various communes assert that alternative self-help projects in West Berlin have created 4,000 to 5,000 jobs for young people that did not exist before. There are 79,000 unemployed in the city.

In Kreuzberg one group is running a "farm" with two cows, two pigs, chickens and rabbits. Others have organized small homes for old people and collective day nurseries. On the earthcovered tracks of a railroad station that was bombed into ruins 40 years ago, a 20-year-old volunteer social worker runs another small "farm" with pigs and horses for neighborhood children to ride on. The project is part of her university study program.

The two most successful and ambitious selfhelp communities are the Kern-Gehäuse in Kreuzberg and the Ufa Fabrik in Tempelhof.

The Kern-Gehäuse - the name connotes "core of the matter" - was started six years ago in an abandoned property typical of that part of Berlin. The houses there were built an average of 120 years ago, at the start of the industrial revolution. The factories were in the third building in the back, behind two courtyards. The workers and their families lived in the second building. The owners and other affluent people lived in the more luxurious front building facing the street, with stores on the ground floor.

The squatters started by digging up the foundations of the buildings and pouring new con-crete to make them stable. Then they fixed their hving quarters, and finally the "factory."

Today, the factory houses a carpentry shop, a pottery, a locksmith's shop, a small metalworking plant and other more or less related work id repair shops. There also is a small taxi fleet. Each unit works semi-independently and keeps

A member of the commune who was asked about technical skills, accounting and marketing ability and experience in financial and legal matters answered easily: "We have the ideas and we go to friends who are lawyers, engineers or artisans and they teach us. Then we do it. We are learning fast."

He was self-confident and sounded more like a successful young executive than a former squatter. He had no doubt that the enterprise would cootinue to expand and do well. "We are a model," he said. "We will be able to advise

Today, the commune of 50 adults and 10 children has a saddle maker's shop, a bakery, a ceramics shop, a school with 12 classes, a playground and sports facilities for children and adults. It also has the only movie theater for the residents of the neighborhood and a circus that goes on tour in other parts of Germany.

A gardener, Walter, joined the commune recently and takes care of the grounds. He is in his late 70s. His age gave the comune members the idea that they could organize a place for old people. The project will be run by two nurses who had wanted to join for some time but had no suitable work

The people of the Ufa Fabrik have friends among Berlin's journalists and have won the respect of the politicians.

At the cafe of the commune, one of the leaders, a long-haired, mild man in his 30s, was talking to three youngsters who looked very different: young toughs in leather jackets and pointed shoes, one with punk-style hair. It turned out that they had been found guilty of shoplifting and other offenses and were about to be sent to a penal institution. But the court, on the advice of a social worker, had sent them to the Ufa commune instead for two weeks of re-

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

NANTES, France — When the Socialists and the Communists came to power in this city, one of the things they promised was to open a window to let in the fresh breeze of culture. When they were voted out last spring, the opened window was probably a major factor in their defeat.

In terms of the French provinces, Socialist culture, as much as Socialist economics, was disturbing. Compressed into an opposition slogan in the Nantes mayoral campaign, it was a case of engraved invitations for the touring company of the Comédie Française being replaced by handbills announcing a city-subsidized production of something called "Lower

Now, with conservatives again running the city, there have been a series of dismissals and budget cuts and a general dismantling of the cultural apparatus set up by the left. The change has occurred in an atmos phere of extraordina ates and conservatives in municipal elections this year.

Because the national government announced "cultural project" as a central aspect of its vision of France at the time of François Mitterrand's presidential victory in 1981, culture, or at least its relation to ideology, has become a fiercely political issue in France. And because the government's polemics have been largely exclusive, suggesting that only the left could properly inspire and nurture culture, the aboutface in cities like Nantes, Brest and St. Etienne is particularly upsetting to it.

Now, the question is being raised whether the methods used in trying to bring about cultural change were not shortsighted and antagonistic.

In a place like Nantes, the country's sixth largest city, culture had been largely train trips to Paris, 215 miles (345 kilometers) to the oortheast, or a year's subscription to evenings here with famous troupes stopping over between

By last July, all city money for Mr. Blaise's group had been cut off and 27 employees' contracts were terminated. Mr. Blaise is staying on in the Nantes area, trying to put together "a center for cultural development" that would be backed by seven small municipalities governed by the left in the region.

He sees the issue of who runs culture in France, and the battle for it, as a surprise for the left. "We always thought it belonged to us, and that the right really conceded it," he said. "Now Culture. But the former director, Loic Volard, edged that many people thought another aspect we realize we can lose it. It can slide away."

Turning Small Towns Into Big Profits Discount King of Bentonville, Arkansas, Taps the American Work Ethic

By Rone Tempest

Los Angeles Times Service BENTONVILLE, Arkansas — Most Saturday mornings, Sam Walton can be found down at the Wal-Mart Stores Inc. anditorium here leading his buyers, warehouse workers, sales clerks, truck drivers and assorted fellow executives in a rousing cheer.

"Who's No. 1?" "Wal-Martl"

"Giunne a 'W' ... Gimme an 'A' ..."
The Saurday morning pep rally is a tradition for Sam Walton, chairman and chief executive officer of the hugely successful chain of 610 Wal-Mart Discount City stores scattered around the South, Southwest and lower Mid-west in small towns such as Skiatook, Oklahoma; Hiawatha, Kansas; Paris, Texas; Paris, Ar-kansas; Paris, Tennessee, and Paris, Kentucky.

Another tradition is making money. Since he opened his first Walton's Five & Dime here in 1950, shortly after getting out of the army, Samuel M. Walton, 65, has expanded until his Wal-Mart Stores Inc. is one of the fastest-growing U.S. businesses. It is getting bigger at the rate of two new discount department stores a

By embracing the same small-town values and rural work ethic that were the trademark of James Cash Penney, the evangelistic founder of the J.C. Penney chain, Mr. Walton has become the darling of Wall Street and one of the richest men in the world. The Walton family (including Sam and his wife, Helen, sons Jim, John and Robson and daughter Alice) controls 42 percent of the Wal-Mart stock.

On paper, at least, that makes them worth more than $2 billion. In the bullish stock market of the last year, the paper value of the five Waltons of Bentonville, Arkansas, has risen more than $300 million.

But people here say money has not changed Sam Walton. He still starts each day with a predawn breakfast in the coffee shop at the has a new junior high school, an ultramodern Bentonville Holiday Inn. He still holds the annual stockholders' meeting in the high school

Mr. Walton is listed among the Brahmins of American business. There are the Rockefellers of New York, the Hunts of Dallas, the DuPonts of Delaware and the Waltons of Bentonville.

And don't think Bentonville, population John Jeffers, president and general manager of 9,000, isn't grateful. While making himself and his broad rich, Mr. Walton has done more than planned the event. "The Waltons are givers, not just a little bit to improve the fortunes of his

To some jaded city slickers, this might seem a somewhat provincial way to do business. But provincialism is at the heart of Wal-Mart's phenomenal success. Mr. Walton and his staff have used it to make fools out of some of their urban-

Mr. Spindel sees Mr. Walton and the compa ny's small-town base as the key to Wal-Mart's

"Most retailers have buying organizations out of New York," he said, "Wal-Mart has never taken anything for granted. They do all of their buying out of Bentonville. They have a work ethic and a lot of common sense. They have given a lot of responsibility to people who have never had it before."

In this way, the rise of Wal-Mart into one of the nation's largest retail chains could be enti-tled, "The Revenge of the Small Town." He was one of them when he owned the five-and-dime on Main Street. His employees, whom he calls "associates," are drawn from this same set of Burton Stacy, who has watched his bank's savings deposits increase from $19 million to $29 rural strivers. They don't live in a mansion in the center

Mr. Walton also lets the employees share in the company's considerable profits so that the profit-sharing account of a 10-year associate is now about $100,000, according to Mr. Steiger.

Typically, the publicity-shy Waltons would not consent to an interview. The Wal-Mart Co., Finally, he has resisted pressures to move his company to Dallas or Houston or St. Louis or Kansas City. Airbus May Get Order For A-320s British Caledonian

Planning to Buy 7 By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribune PARIS -- British Caledonian Airways, Britain's largest indepen-dent airline, said Tuesday that it planned to order seven Airbus A-

Initial development work is get-ting under way on the A-320, which is to have a capacity of about 150

The order, valued at an estimated £150 million ($225 million) and which includes an option to buy an additional three planes, was expected to play an important, but not decisive, role in beginning de-velopment and production of the A-320, industry officials said.

The A-320 has been under active study for several years by the aircraft industries and governments of France, Britain and West Germany. The three nations are the largest participants in Airbus Industrie which hopes to make the plane ommercially available in 1988. Airbus has estimated total development costs at about $2 billion. Industry officials estimate that $20 million, or I percent of the total, has been spent on the project so far.

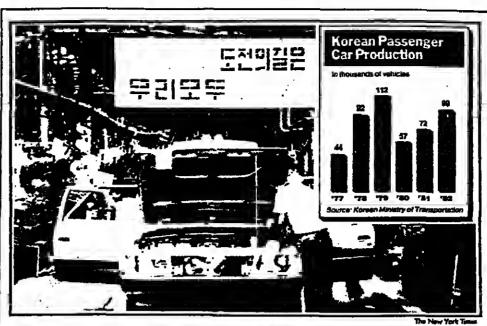

Commenting on the order at a news conference in London, Roger Béteille, general manager of the most significant step toward the formal launch" of the program, which he said would be decided by the participants at the end of this

Air France and Air Inter. France's state-controlled airlines. have ordered 35 of the twin-engine planes for delivery in the spring of 1988, with options to buy 35 more. At present, Airbus is actively negotiating additional sales with about 10 other airlines in Europe and Asia, Pierre G. Pailleret, senior vice president for marketing, said in a telephone interview from Airbus headquarters in Toulouse.

"This order will certainly help, considering that British Caledonian is a privately owned airline," Mr. Pailleret said. "The final decision to launch will be made before Dec. 31, 1983, but we might not need additional orders to start the program, since we are convinced the market [for the A-320] is there."

In London, British Caledonian said It was ordering the A-320s to replace its aging fleet of BAC-111s and that the choice was made amid intense competition from the Boeing 737-300, which also carries about 150 passengers, and an advanced, 140-seat version of the Mc-Donnell Douglas DC-9 airliner. Korean Car Firms Regain Hopes

Surge in Buying Revives Plans for Export Push

By Steve Lohr

New York Tunes Service

SEOUL - There are any number of economic success stories in South Korea, but the automobile industry is not one of them. At least, not yet.

During the 1970s, in a push to turn South Korea into a major car exporter, the government promot-ed an ambitious buildup of production capacity. But the effort was premature, and the resulting offerings were not competitive in performance and quality, especially against Japanese exports. From 1980 to 1982, the industry had losses totaling some Today, however, optimism is returning. The industry, strengthened by a surge in car-buying at home, has become profitable. Factories are operating at about 65 percent of capacity.

While the domestic market will be the focus for the short term, Korean auto executives are not reticent about saying that they want their industry to be an export power someday.

"Japan proved it can be done," said Chung Se Yung, president of Hyundai Motor Co., the country's biggest automaker, "so why should we not do

There are many skeptics, however, who feel that the Korean auto industry's present base is far too small for it to be dreaming of overseas conquests. The Koreans will find it very difficult to compete with the Japanese in auto exports, the skeptics maintain, both because of the protectionism that Japan's success has already inspired and because of the big lead the Japanese industry has in lowcost, high-quality production.

Even government officials have doubts, "It is a risky industry," said Suh Sang Mok, a Westerntrained economist and senior counselor to the minister of economic planning, "As an economist, I am skeptical. But in the past, no one in America thought much of Japanese cars."

The South Korean anto industry is small and sheltered from foreign competition. The companies still make some foreign cars, such as the Ford Granada produced by Hyundai, but that is a tiny part of their operations.

Korean Car Firms Regain Optimism

With the government's blessing, the industry is highly concentrated.

Hyundai claimed 79 percent of Korea's passenger-car production last year, while Daewoo, the country's second-largest rutomaker, accounted for 15 percent

Now both companies, their confidence mounting along with their profits, have dusted off blueprints lor heady expansion projects and are charging ahead. Hyundai plans to increase its production capacity 150 percent, to 350,000 cars a year, by carly 1985.

Japan's Mitsobishi Motors Corp., which last year bought a 10-percent stake in Hyundai for $9 million, will sell to the Korean company the engine design and other technical expertise for its new model, which is to be developed isometime in the next few years.

Daewoo Motor expects that its production will more than double this year, to 30,600 passenger cars, and then double again by 1985. The company, a 50-50 joint venture with General Motors, was called Sachan imtil last January, when the

Indeed, there would seem to be room for expension in the domestic market. South Korea has a tiny car population, given its level of economic development. WASHINGTON - Chrysler Corp. will scrap a $600-million plan to build a new small car in the United States if General Motors Corp. is allowed to import large numbers of small cars from Japan, Chrysler officials have confirmed.

Instead of lighting GM with U.S.-built cars, Chrysler would follow GM's example and import the products it needs to remain competitive in the small-car market, Chrysler officials said Monday.

That decision would do away with about 4,200 jobs at a Chrysler plant in Belvidere, Illinois, where the new automobiles, to be known lion, and to limit an extension of pan is prepared to agree to another as "P-cars," were to be built for the the quotas to one year.

pan is prepared to agree to another year of the restraints, which took 1986 and 1987 model years. The decision also would affect nearly 16,000 jobs at 29 companies scheduled to supply parts.

"Chrysler just can't sit here and let General Motors bring in all of those cars and do oothing about it," said Robert A. Perkins, vice president in charge of Chrysler's Washington office.

The question is whether the Japanese and U.S. governments will help GM implement its so-called Japanese strategy. Mr. Perkins said. GM wants to raise the current quotas on imported Japanese cars

In addition, GM wants the federal government to lower requireents for new-car fuel consump-

The higher Japanese import quotas and the agreement with Toyota could give GM the capacity to sell nearly 500,000 small cars annually at a relatively small production cost.

"In the final analysis, the A-320 won because it provides the best, possible economic-operational for-mula for B-Cal through the 1990s," Sir Adam said, adding that the order also is expected to save about $,000 jobs at the plants of British Aerospace in Britain. The British plants will handle about a quarter of the work on the plane, primarily making the wings.

Meanwhile, the British Caledonian order was expected to accelerate development of an engine for the A-320 and other oew aircraft. "Government approval of the con-sortium of Pratt & Whitney [of the United States], Rolls Royce [of Britain] and others is expected in the immediate future, paving the way for the development of engines" for the new plane, a spokesman for Pratt & Whitney, a divi-sion of United Technologies, said in East Hartford, Connecticut. 'That's the difference'

It's a fact that Standard Chartered Bank has 1900 branches in over 60 countries.

And it's common experience that doing international business through Standard Chartered can be a lot more efficient - and profitable – as a result.

Because we're dealing with our own branches, we can often solve in hours a problem that would take a correspondent network days to unravel.

Because our branches are linked by the latest computer technology, working through our own private telecommunications network, we can speed the transmission of funds and the processing of documents dramatically. (It used to be an important advantage. Today, it's a crucial one.)

And because we can offer you a complete range of services worldwide (from 24-hour-aday foreign exchange dealing in 55 currencies through 18 dealing locations, to trade and project finance and merchant banking services) you'll almost certainly discover that we can make your international business life a lot simpler - as well as more efficient.

We have, in short, something different to offer you. And discovering the difference could be the best

Eastern Employees Prepare to Strike; Rose 11% in 3d Quarter Dismissal of Continental Filing Sought

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines flight attendants began making strike preparations Tuesday as their union leaders and company managers continued contract talks. Meanwhile, striking pilots of Continental Airlines asked a court to dismiss the company's bankruptcy petition.

Representatives of Eastern and its flight attendants met here with a federal mediator for 10 hours Monday. The negotiations resumed Tuesday, but union officials said they held little hope of reaching agreement before the strike deadline of midnight Wednesday.

In Houston, the Continental pilots filed a motion in U.S. bankruptcy court asking that the airline's reorganization petition be dismissed. They charged that the company was more concerned with breaking labor contracts than repaying debts. TAMING THE TIGER:

The Struggle to Control Technology By Witold Rybezynski, 247 pp. $15.95. Viking 40 West 23d St., New York, N.Y.

Reviewed by Noel Perrin

I00I0.

D EOPLE who write books about technology usually fit into one of two rather simpleminded classes. The first class consists of engineers, historians of science, etc., who look with pride on the history of man's growing control over nature, and (barring a dumb misstep like nuclear war) look forward to a future of even greater control. The second class consists of humanists of various sorts, plus an occasional apostate scientist. Its members look with horfor on the machine's growing control over man, and (barring a radical change in the course of civilization) foresee a future in which most of us will be the helpless victims of our computers, robots, and androids.

Witold Rybczynski, to his credit, belongs to neither class. A Canadian, and a housing expert at McGill University, Professor Rybczynski sees that technology is not an automatczynski sees that technology is not an automat-ic instrument of liberation. That is, he does not believe that every technical advance represents progress. He also sees that prior to high technology, life for most people was nasty, brutish, and short.

In this book, Rybczynski traces the numer-ous attempts that groups of workers and occasionally whole governments have made to control technology that they perceived as harmful. Workers do it by strikes and sabotage, governments by fiat. He also reaches for conclusions, notably as to what kinds of technology. nology are harmful, and what methods of control might work.

In the historical part of the book, he mostly succeeds. He has assembled a great many instructive stories. He brings together, for example, the attempts of Egypt in the 16th century, Japan in the 17th, and Madagascar in the 19th to practice selective control of technology. And the more recent attempts by Burna between 1948 and the 1970s, and Kampuchea (a.k.a. Cambodia) between 1974 and 1978. None, of course, succeeded permanently — though Japan's did go 250 years.

However, when Rybczynski turns from history to analysis, he suffers from a sort of deliberate short-sightedness which greatly weakens most of his conclusions. For exa he concludes (as many have before him) that the assembly line is a harmful technique. The work is repetitive and uncreative; the worker has little or no control; only high wages make such a worker's life bearable. Here is one claw of the tiger's paw. How to blunt it? Easy, says: Rybczynski: There is a solution arriving even now. We are moving from assembly lines, which are only semi-automated, to continuous-flow processes (as in oil refineries) which are totally antomated. Here the human job "consists in periodic monitoring and occasional maintenance, done at the worker's pace." Goodbye repetitive screw-tightening, welcome

Rybezynski conveniently manages not to see that there will be such a job for maybe one assembly-line worker in 20, and even those who get them may be bored silly watching the dials. As a result, his "solution" is absurd. Kurt Vonnegat, writing "Player Piano" 30 years ago, had far deeper things to say about contin-tions-process automation than Rybezynski

By Alan Truscott

does now. So, in a subtler way, did Stanislaw Lem, writing "The Cyberiad" in 1967. In fact, even quite mediocre science fiction writers have seen deeper into this and similar matters Unlike Rybezynski, few of them suppose that what human beings want most from the environment is a predictible response. (Hence the attraction of technology, which is a mode of increasing predictability.) Of course that's a human desire - almost perfectly balanced, however, by the human desire for unpredicti-

Once I gave as the entire final exam in a science fiction course the following question: "If it were in your power to air-condition this planet, would you? Give reasons for your auswer." About 11 percent of the students said they'd do it; the rest declined. They saw all the advantages in convenience and comfort; they also foresaw huge boredom.

Outside of narrow limits, Rybczynski does very little foreseeing in this book. If you want the history of attempts to control to control to control to the forest looking at If you want implications for the marrow of the control to th for the present and future, you'll do far better with Vonnegut and Lem.

However, the Orioles are uncertain whether Mike Flanagan (12-4) or 21-year-old Storm Davis (13-7), both nursing injuries, will face Carlton, who has more strikeouts than any other pitcher in history.

The Orioles are not even certain whether they will use a four-man rotation that would include both Flanagan and Davis, or trim down to three so that McGregor can pitch three times, including a possible seventh game matchup with Carlton. "Scotty prefers to pitch on the fourth day," said Altobelli, indicating that McGregor's success or lack of it, in the opener could affect the Orioles' plans.

Certainly these two clubs, which occasionally play a spring training game in Florida but have never met in a Series, have a world of things to learn about each other.

Miller said the Orioles plan to attack the Phillies in the same manner they did the White Sox: "By finding out where you can throw fast balls for strikes when you have no choice."

McGregor, who has now pitched four times in postseason in 1979 and 1983 and performed well in all of them, said, "I think I know which [Philadelphia] hitter to "key" on. He hits about 100 home runs a year.... I have to keep reminding myself that a very successful hitter is a complete failure. He only does his job right three times out of 10.

As to the pressure and anxiety level that is inherent in these events, McGregor said. "You don't realize how high we're walking right now."

Taking a Chance With Genius

Near Defeat, Germany, England Try the Unpredictable

LONDON — When you are dug into the last ditch, what breed of men do you want at your side artistes brushed with unpredictable genius, or artisans prepared to fight to the end?

This month's crucial European Championship qualifying matches are riddled with dilemma. In England, the most gifted and most mistrusted player of the modern age is Glenn Hoddle. In West Germany it is Bernd Schuster, in Italy Giancarlo Antognoni, in Hungary Andres Torocsik

Who dares rely on their inspiration? The enigma was probably ever thus: Long ago, before there were coaches to hire or fire on the vagaries of victory or defeat, Sir Stanley Matthews was thought the finest winger in history. But his appearances for England were intermittent. No one doubted his skill, just his physical commitment and his effectiveness over the full

Matthews was, in a way, the forerunner of the modern individualist Soccer's strategy has changed, so midfield orchestrators rather than fleet-footed wingers attract our most ferocious scrutiny.

When West Germany beat Austria, 3-0, last week, the major de-bate was not that Karl-Heinz Rummenigge and Rudi Voller had scored goals aided and abetted by inept Austrian defending. It was about Schuster, the enfant terrible being given another chance to influence Germany's teamwork. "Schuster was a ballerina," scoffed Billy Bingham, manager of Northern Ireland, which visits West Germany oext month. Bingham's criticism was that Schuster played for himself, attempting fantastic passes when the occasion demanded the more practical.

It is true that Northern Ireland's warrior-type runners eclipsed Schuster in Belfast a year ago, and true that Schuster is not the explosively creative force he was in 1980. But even if he cannot perform with robotic consistency, the West Germans seem intent on building the team around him.

Bingham may yet have to acknowledge Schuster's touch of ge-

Just as England may yet cele-brate Hoddle's return to the team Wednesday in Bodapest if be can stroke England to victory. Hoddle is built in the mould of Jimmy Greenhoff and Alan Hudson, Englishmen more subtle than their colleagues and dilettantes rarely to the team's needs. Hoddle was a spectator in the stands at Wembley a few weeks ago And is he one you'd want on your when England, without a single midfield player noted for creativity, brought howls of decision as it was totally outwitted by Denmark. "Hoddle, Hoddle, Hoddle" was the almost unison cry. The player himself lost no time in orch ing his own media propaganda: "It was frustrating to watch," he de-clared. "But you'll never see the best of Glenn Hoddle until 1 am given a decent run in the side." He has a point. Although Hod-dle has played 15 times for En-gland, he has never had more than two consecutive appearances. And, since his talents are unique to Britain, it is logical to agree that, if he is to become truly influential, he needs a run of eight or more consecutive games. Other players need that time to learn to anticipate his 30- to 40-yard passes, hit with spin so that they dip and swerve and drop into free spaces. He has other virtues, the very substance of inventive genius. His brain, when others do his fetching and carrying, is indispensible. His dipping shots are the stuff Jack Nicklans achieves with a chip.

When you witness glimpses of such a rare talent, you wonder how there can be any doubt about his inclusing in any team.

"The kid can do anything," admits England's manager, Bobby Robson, in referring to Hoddle. The "kid" is 25, almost 26, by which time genius is usually established, But Robson adds: "His skills are breathtaking in training, but after the disaster against the Danes I talked to Glenn and told him what it would take to walk into my team - which he should do.

I asked him to avoid his niggling little injuries and show be can dominate a match, to prove to me be is no longer a player who might disappear for 20 minutes in each

There we have the true perspec tive: The question about Hoddle has never been about touch or vision, which no contemporary Englishman equals, but his staying

Sir Alf Ramsey, the former England manager whose team built around Bobby Chariton and Martin Peters won the 1966 World Cup, made a rare comment last week.

> Strange that England, having shown such little faith in Hoddle should now, east him in the role of national saviour.

"It's a do or die game, isn't it?" asks Tibor Nyilasi, Hungary's own gifted captain. "It always is against the English."

Nyilasi is, like Hoddle, a creator. Unlike Hoddle, and even more unlike his countryman Andras Torocsik, Nyilasi had proved consistent in the national cause. He and uncompromising defender Imrie Garaba are the only Hungarians retained by new manager Gyorgy Mezey whose task, now that Hungary has surrendered its European opes, is to build pride and a team for the 1986 World Cap.

The emphasis will be on organization. "Hungary lost the Latin style and cannot attain the British style," says Mezey. "We wanted to increase the physical capabilities but cannot because the players' personalities are very similar to the

Robson will beware the Hungarian cloak of pessimism. Nevertheless, the early eclipse of Torocsik symbolizes the withering of Hungary's finest flower. Here is a player, still young, whose commitment never matched his talents, a youngster turned to drink and disaffed

Sad, but Torocsik has had more chances than Schuster, who is having more than Hoddle. More than the three pot together, Giancarlo Antognoni was persevered with by Italian manager Enzo Bearzot ever when he lost ground through a skull facture, even when the nation was again him. Bearzot's reward was that Antognoni's recovery became inseparable from Italy's 1982 World Cup triumph.

Nothing lasts for long in sport however. Italy is already a European failure, without a single win in six games and Bearzot's team in Naples for the visit of Sweden on Sunday has but three World Cup winners - Antonio Cabrini, Bruno Conti and Paolo Rossi. Half a dozen others sit on the bench, hoping their appetite will be restored by watching others in their place. Success, like genius, is a fleeting, clusive, at times illusory commod-

Oilers Name Studley Interim Coach

HOUSTON (UPI) - The Houston Oilers on Tuesday appointed defensive coordinator Chuck Studley as interim head coach through the remainder of this season. Studley, the architect of the San Francisco 49ers defense in their 1981 Super Bowl season, replaces Ed Biles, who resigned Monday with the team in a 13-game losing streak.

Studiey, hired by Biles less than one year ago from the 49ers, takes his first National Football League head coaching job with the promotion after working as an assistant in the league with the 49ers and the Cincinnati Bengals. Biles resigned amid intense criticism over mounting fosses, giving the franchise little time to arrange for a change at the top of the coaching staff or seek a permanent replacement from outside the Organization.

Fear of Fenestration

By Russell Baker

New YORK — Not long ago I was hugged by Dr. Leo Buscaglia, who agrees with the telephone company and certain church rule of thumb is that if you can look people that everybody ought to out your window and see the whites reach out and touch somebody. Though I was meeting Dr. Buscaglia for the first time and don't usually take to hugging even from old friends, it was a pleasant experi-

I think this was because Dr. Buscaglia not only feels better for emwill make the stranger feel better, too. In my experience, though, not many people reaching out to touch you exude his warmth and good-

This may be because I live in Manhattan's human ant heap where one of life's hardest struggles is to preserve a small envelope of private space between yourself and the rest of pressing humanity. If you live alone in Nevada's desert you probably welcome an embrace from the occasional stranger. Not in New York.

In New York you cherish that tiny private space between yourself and the steamy millions, and the question of how close is too close is one that New Yorkers weigh constantly every day. The answer varies from situation to situation. In the rush-hour subway three people pressing tightly against you are not too close, but the strange band inside your clothing is. On the sidewalk, two inches away isn't too close, but the pedestrian who vio-lates the two-inch border and gently hrushes your shoulder sets off your internal alarm system.

The question is even trickier wheo you get to sight lines between windows across streets and back yards. In the privacy of our apartments — homes, as we think of them — New Yorkers tend to live very much the way people live on the sparsely populated prairie.

They pare their toenails on the parlor couch, throw lamps at each other in anger and walk around, wheo the mood is on them, stark naked. I knew this from nine years of looking out my own windows to windows across streets and back yards, windows behind which New Yorkers feel sufficiently remote from other humanity to leave un-

New Yorkers accept having their daily lives observed by each other through their windows, provided the windows are not too close. The of your neighbor's eyes, you're too close. If he's 25 or 30 yards away, that's all right. He may be able to see what you look like - in the unlikely event both of you have had your windows washed - but he is still not inside your private life. You don't have to worry that he'll bracing strangers, but also thinks it stop you on the street tomorrow morning and say, "That's really a bad case of athlete's foot you've got — I wish you'd cover your toes before you walk toward my win-

> New York is always a crisis, of course, and I am now in the middle of a too-close-window crisis. For several years the back of my place looked out on a hlank brick wall about four stories high. It wasn't an inspirational view unless you're moved by prison atmospherics, but in the back part of the place there was nobody gazing in.

Now, suddenly disaster: The hrick wall has been punctured for windows. The owner is turning the place, ooce a meat packer's build-ing, into another hive for humans, who like windows. The problem is that that wall is only 30 feet away from my windows.

The other morning, getting into my underwear, I heard a voice at my elbow saying, "You didn't get a very good shave this morning." It was a workman standing at the window that opens directly into my bedroom. I could see the whites of his eyes and notice that he had a had hangnail.

Is this too close? Yes. Whoever rents these windows will not only be able to reach out and touch me. they will also be able to clamp a clothespin over my nose when I

There are two alternatives, but trying to find a new apartment in Manhattan is like trying to catch a unicorn in the Kremlin. So I'll have a bricklayer seal up my windows. It'll be mighty dark in there then, but what's a little dungeon gloom to a New Yorker as long as nobody can reach in and touch him?

Gypsy Rose Lee and the Wolf

And How It Took 57 Takes to Get a Leg Lifting Scene Right

By John Noble Wilford

New York Times Service SHOOTING a movie about wolves in the arctic was asking for a pack of headaches. Weather was often the least of the worries. There were 10 wolves to be trained, including one that had to learn to lift its hind lex on cue as if urinating to mark off its territory. That took two weeks and 57 takes. There was the herd of 500 wild caribou that had to be rounded up on the tundra and then released, along with the wolves, at the right time and in the right direction for the big chase scene. That took a month to hring about

And then there was the little problem with Farley Mowat, who wrote the book, "Never Cry Wolf," on which the movie of the same name is based. While on location in the Yukon, in his cathat the director, Carroll Ballard, cast him in a small role.

interview from his home on Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, he was to play a bartender who has one scene and one line in the movie. The hero, a young Canadian government biologist named Tyler, looking for a bush pilot to fly him has arrived in an arctic settlement to the area where he is to make a study of wolf behavior. When Tyler (played by Charles Martin Smith) asks the bartender if he knows of such a pilot, Mowat was supposed to open a bottle of beer deliberately, drink half of it in a gulp and say something like, "Sure, I know who you want. It was the author's dream come true. "I had visions of Hollywood beating at my door and thousands of beautiful women falling at my feet," Mowat recalled.

But the first time the cameras pacity as consultant, Mowat grew rolled, Mowat muffed his one pacity as consultant, mowal grew

As Mowat told it in a telephone came out Rosie Lee. He could not get Gypsy Rose Lee out of his mind. And so it went take after disastrous take. The only part he executed with professional aplomh was opening and drinking the beer. It was real beer, a new bottle for each take.

> "I'm told I gave a very convincing performance of a drunken bartender," Mowat said, by way of explaining why, after some two dozen takes, the scene and his movie debut wound up on the cutting-room floor. "Probably jost as well," he added. "I couldn't have handled all those beautiful women."

The tale proved, if nothing else, that Mowat is just as good a story-teller in real life as he is in his 24 books about the lands, seas, people and wildlife of the Far North. He makes no attempt to conceal his emotions, which often run to outrage. "Everything outrages me that outrages nature," he said, "and most of what modern man

But primarily the experts could not accept Mowat's revisionist interpretation of wolf behavior. Wolves, he said, were usually depicted as "savage, bloodthirsty, white-fanged beasts - all the bad qualities, human qualities, were inloaded on wolves."
